"These limericks reject the cheap way out in rhyming irrelevant people and places, further, they are completely anapestic in meter, in the most classical tradition. They emphasize narrative structure and, except when being deliberately playful with the expectations of the form, follow through to a proper punchline. The overt craft and refinement of these limericks is a large part of what makes them so filthy--the very thought of someone devoting such care and cognitive resources to subjects like fisting and felching and bestiality is patently disturbing. And deliciously funny."

This is a book of poetry that was published by Stars and Stripes of poetry written in 1945 in the European Theater, by soldiers. It would seem that they were not edited carefully, some are really good, some meloncholy, some really bad, and some... limericks, and attempts at humor. An interesting insight into what was at best a bad situation.

Lear, Edward. A Book of Limericks. Edward Lear. 1888. 244. Little, Brown & Co.. Boston. 25-85 "Book", pp. 27-81 "Pictures". d. 214. Probably c1903, the 1888 copyright notwithstanding. Little, Brown, a publisher of law books and other "respectable" works, did not publish its first piece of fiction until 1896 and it is unlikely that it would have published Lear at all in 1888. It acquired in 1898 the general list of Roberts Brothers, which had published Nonsense Books in 1888, and Little, Brown, in all likelihood, included the Little, Brown title page with the newly obtained sections of the 1888 Nonsense Books in a subsequent printing. Since Little, Brown published A Book of Limericks copyrighted 1908, the publication of this edition would have been 1898-1908, probably closer to the mid point. This edition contains sections from Lear's books entitled "A Book of Nonsense," "One Hundred Nonsense Pictures and Rhymes," "Nonsense Songs," and "Laughable Lyrics."

Lear, Edward. A Book of Nonsense (1st ed.). Edward Lear. 1846. Thomas McLean. London. 73. "By Derry down Derry." Two separate volumes, each with thirty-six limericks in three line format set in capitals plus the 'Derry Down Derry' title leaf. It was reproduced by lithography and sold at 3/6. Derry down Derry is the name of one of the fools in the mummer plays and recurs in the refrains of early folk songs. Most of the limericks were written at Knowsley between 1831 and 1837.

Lear, Edward. A Book of Nonsense (2nd ed.). Edward Lear. 1855. Thomas McLean. London. 73. Reprinted in a single volume "By Derry Down Derry." All seventy-three limericks in five line format and printed in italics. There are small differences in the illustrations.

Lear, Edward. Book of Nonsense (3rd ed.). Edward Lear. 1861. Routledge, Warne & Routledge. London. 113. Newly enlarged edition with 43 additional limericks but omitting 'Old Man of New York,' 'Old Sailor of Compton,' and 'Old Man of Kildare.' Letterprint text and wood-engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. The first edition to acknowledge Lear as the author.

Onehunderedeleven Limericks. 1951. 111. Privately Printed. Switzerland. 111. The spine is marked Limericks as is the third inner leaf (but without asterisks). The fourth leaf says Onehunderedeleven

Limericks, as typed, with no spaces between the first three words. The date on the bottom of this page is MDCCCCLI, which I take to be 1951. The reverse side carries the legend PRIVATELY PRINTED IN SWITZERLAND, the next leaf is page No.1 which has the Aberystwith / pissed with limerick. The generally place-name (with some Christian names) alphabetical limericks continue until page 11, ending with the equally well known A young little harlot of Yale / Braille effort. The spine is black, the bulk of the covers are in a green/orange marbled effect and the book has the luxury of a silky bookmark.

Peter Pauper's Limerick Book: A Collection From Many Sources, Cleansed, Adapted and Published for the Delectation of the Public Illustrated by Herb Roth. Herb Roth. ca.1943. 83. Peter Pauper Press. Mount Vernon, NY. d g. Anthology. c. 307. Peter Beilenson (ed.). Date uncertain - possibly 1942 or 1940 reprinted in 1942; some citations give n.d. and 84 or 93 pp. Nicknamed the "Red Dog Edition" because limericks are separated by red typographical dogs, rather than signs of the zodiac as in most later editions. The possibility exists that there were actually several editions in the 1940-42 period. Slipcased. The limerick on page 3 appears to be a clean version of the naughty limerick in earlier editions: containing "t---" and "sp--" . "Fourteen hundred and fifty copies of this book have been set in Baskerville types and printed on ivory Glenbourn paper at the Walpole Printing Office in Mount Vernon" or "Fourteen hundred and fifty copies of this book have been set in Baskerville types and printed on ivory Victorian paper at the Walpole Printing Office in Mount Vernon" or "...ivory Buckeye paper..." The editor's preface set forth the particulars for a contest with prizes totalling fifty pounds for limericks to appear in this volume with altered name. This book is the result of that appeal. Among the contributors are Eddie Marsh, Naomi Mitchison, and Lord Knebworth. Apparently rare: not in the British Library, and only two copies located by NUC.

Reed, Langford. The Coronation Limerick Book. 1937. Herbert Jenkins. London. B. Anthology. ?. Although this work is cited in the literature, no copies are known to exist; citations may refer to "A Coronation Romance" which appears in Reed's The New Limerick Book published by Herbert Jenkins in 1937. Reed's My Limerick Book (1937) includes The Coronation Limerick Book in a "By the same Author" list -- but The New Limerick Book, which includes My Limerick Book in its "Books by the same Author" list does not include The Coronation Limerick Book. Perhaps a very limited edition of The Coronation Limerick Book was included in, or reprinted as, The New Limerick Book. Or, more likely, since all the limericks in The New Limerick Book are about the coronation, The Coronation Limerick Book may simply be a nickname for The New Limerick Book.
